Greetings

Dear Heguru Families,

Warmly greetings from us,

Time just flew by and we are all already in the month of June. The new mid school year has begun and we all in the right momentum to still teach and develop our child's learning capacity.

Remember, this golden moment of age; we don't race with anyone to see how quickly a child can achieve something.

But rather, this short window of time; they need to learn and develop at the right pace for them. We from Heguru Academy are rigorously trained and equipped to apply all materials and curriculum that is important for child's brain stimulation. We hope that your child first education will lay a strong learning foundation that will help him/her for the rest of their live.

We truly value your support and participation in your child's learning journey; and here's our Newsletter with an essence of our program, method, curriculum that you can abreast too.

God Bless Us. Stay safe and stay healthy.

Warmest regards,
Mr. Suryanto Lim
Principal Heguru Academy

HOW TO TALK TO CHILDREN SO THEY LISTEN

Do you find yourself endlessly repeating a request to your child, only to receive no response at all? Exasperated, your request morphs into constant nagging until finally you resort to “If you don’t do what I say now the consequences will be dire!” Nobody ends up feeling great about themselves and the cycle merely continues.

Put yourself in your child’s shoes for a moment. Just like you, they have their own preoccupations, concerns and priorities. Think about it – would you like to be interrupted in the middle of a favorite activity, your concentration broken, your sense of enjoyment shattered, because someone intrudes into your space demanding you do something there and then?

Children pass through numerous milestones as they develop. They are bombarded continuously with millions of stimuli; there’s a great deal to take in. When they blank out and switch off, or if they need extensive coaxing to move from time to time, it’s hardly surprising!

What sort of language do you use when speaking with your child?

Is your tone authoritative and demanding, tolerant or indulgent? When you ask your child to do something is it really necessary at that moment or is it more about your need for control? And how do you react to certain behaviors in your child? Do you mete out punishment if they do not listen? Or are you exceedingly liberal?

1. Positive communication

Do you find yourself shouting at your child from another room – “Turn off the TV!”- Instead of going up to him, getting down to his level to gain his attention and modelling the positive communication you would like in return? Try doing this next time.

2. Let all expectations be known

Calmly state your expectations from the outset, keeping explanations short and simple, using one or two-word reminders later if necessary. “Teeth please!” With some simple routines and clear instructions in place, given time, your child will understand what’s expected of him.

3. State the facts and offer other options

Empower your child with facts and realistic options that allow her to make independent choices that lead to positive learning experiences, rather than unattainable goals. For example, if the bedtime routine is bath – teeth cleaning – story time, but your child repeatedly wants to skip straight to the story, offer her a choice that she can reasonably figure out herself. “Ok, you don’t have to bathe or clean your teeth tonight, but that means no story too. Or you can enjoy the story as soon as you’ve had a bath and cleaned your teeth.

What would you like to do?”

4. It goes both ways

Good communication is a two-way process. Stop what you are doing when your child talks to you and listen to what he has to say. Model good listening if you want him to do the same! If you want to communicate better with your child it may mean changing tack.

As you find an approach that results in a greater balance of mutual listening and talking, you’ll find you gain the rewards of mutual trust and respect in the process.

FOREIGN LANGUAGES

What do you think about learning a foreign language in the early age? Is it confused a child or it is beneficial for him? In Heguru we study many languages besides English because we believe introducing foreign languages in the early age is a part of brain stimulation. Based on the research, children who study different languages show a better focus and attention. Besides, they are good in socialize and communicating with others. It also build children's confidence where ever they stand. By understanding different languages, children will acquire new cultures. It helps them to be more respect to each other.

In Heguru's class, we use flash card and song to deliver a foreign language to the students. Some of you learn French, Spanish, Chinese, or Japanese through words flash card in the class. So, there are some tips to learn languages using flashcard:

1. Input by flipping the word cards
2. Say it out loud in a clear pronunciation
3. Ask the child to choose and take the word cards
4. Ask the child to say the words
