Unleash The Genius In Your Child

Greetings

Greeting Parents,

I trust that everyone had a great learning time together with your child at home. It was amazing experiences for all of us jumping into online classes and seeing the growth that our students exhibit from the early days until today.

Given a different learning environment, i was amazed by our student's focus and attention with this online learning. I have witnessed immense growth of our students. You should be proud as their parents!

With the same emphasis on excellence and high quality of our Face to Face Class, our students will be having a fruitful time of learning at home as well.

We are confident that, with your support, we will be able to provide our students with a positive and meaningful learning experience.

Also, I would like to appreciate all parents who joined our Webinar series in the month of April. I hope you found it useful. Do check the notices about future events of this kind. You are welcome to join any Parenting Talk/Seminar event hosted by Heguru Academy.

Warmest regards, Mr. Suryanto Lim Principal Heguru Academy

Teaching Manners To Kids: When Is The Best Time To Start?

Manners are tied in with self-respect and others. It is also a means of maintaining social boundaries. From as young as infanthood, we may start to teach our kids manners, formally or informally. Teaching manners to our kids is a vital part of parenting and contributes invaluably to how they treat themselves and others as they grow.

So when is a good time to start? And what can you teach?

1 year old and below

For the first year of life, babies generally cry when they have needs – be it hunger, fatigue or a need to be comforted. It is not necessary at this stage to teach them formal manners. However, babies can observe manners in their caregivers. For example, they can hear the tones of voices in their environment and observe the facial expressions of the people around them.

When the babies are between 8 months to 1 year, some parents may also be teaching nursing manners, such as unlatching each time the baby bites, or tapping the hand away when the baby tries to lift up a shirt in public.

Toddlerhood: Age 1 - 2

At this age, your little ones will be inquisitive explorers. Be realistic with expectations. They may not be able to eat cleanly or pack up their toys properly.

Focus on the basics. Practice simple words such as "Please", "Thank you", "Excuse me" and "I am sorry". Get them to grasp the idea of sitting down for meal-times, as opposed to having you chase the child around with an out-stretched spoon. Even better, they can hand you their spoon or bowl when done.

Age 3 to 6

At this age, children can understand instructions more comprehensively and have better self-control. There is also a higher degree of social interaction and many components of manners that can be taught.

Sportsmanship and politeness

Teach them to share, take turns and play fair with others. No name-calling or physical acts towards others – beating, pushing, pinching, biting, spitting. Teach them how to respect when others are talking and when to wait for others. They can also learn how to make simple requests such as asking to borrow a toy or book or to participate in an activity at a certain time. As we teach our children manners, we should also model it by not interrupting when they are speaking to us and looking at them when they are talking.

Physical boundaries

Children are taught manners so they can behave appropriately with regards to physical boundaries. This is especially important as children at this age start to be independent and parents may not be with them as much. Examples include being clothed before leaving the washroom, sitting properly in public and teaching them not to touch others' private parts, and neither can others touch theirs.

How to agree or disagree

Children can be taught how to make decisions and respond in a well-mannered way. For example, "No thanks, I cannot eat candies/nuts", if they have been taught to do so towards those types of food; "Yes please, I would like to have more"; "Yes/No, I want/don't want to hug you".

Age 7 to 10

At primary school age, children can understand more of what goes behind a gesture or manner.

They can be taught how to be kind to others, how to empathize, how to be a good sport. They can grasp values better and possess a greater sense of ownership and responsibility. Some age-appropriate manners would include respecting others' belonging and privacy, learning to ask for permission, honoring one's words, showing appreciation and willingness to help in according to situations.

Guiding our children to grow up with manners is a dynamic journey that requires a lot of day to day effort. Good manners and respect for self and others go a long way in building the confidence of our children and grounding them from doing the correct things in life.

Parents' Name: Mrs. Shierly & Mr. Yustinus

I found Heguru few years ago when my first child's school were the same location with Heguru. But I tried to find out more about Heguru for my third child. Actually I just curious but then in first visit I and my husband interested in the methods that Heguru used, quite extra ordinary and unusual. Gyselle also enjoys the Heguru learning time.

Even though my daughter haven't shown anything "magic" since she hasn't able to talk clearly but I can feel she would absorb the energy of Heguru and she has progressed in her way of learning. For myself, attending Heguru with my daughter also gives me positive impacts. I also learn a lot. I like the positive proverbs and positive sentences that hopefully will stick to children's mind also. In short.

Heguru time is really never ending fun and excitement!

In infant and toddler class, the children practicing puzzles such as iroita and tangram. There are more puzzles for preschool class such as plate puzzle, pelican puzzle, and magic block. The purpose of practicing puzzles is to enhance the ability of resolving things and recognition of shapes. practicina When puzzles, especially during infant and toddler class it's very important for parents the to input information by saying the formal name of shapes to the children.

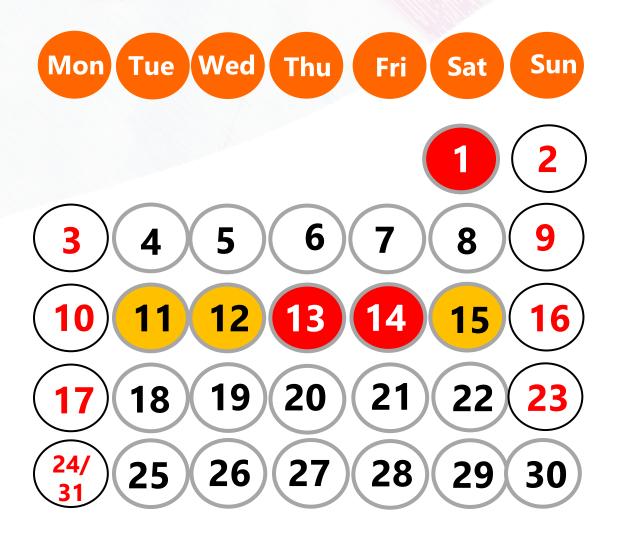

Beside the puzzles that children use in the class, it is also good to practice with jigsaw puzzles that are sold in public. It helps to nurture concentration and processing abilities.

One more important point when practicing puzzle is to note the time. For the puzzles that are used in the class, aim for completion within one minute. Gradually time should be reduced. The reason for this is to grow time awareness in children.
